ARE GOING TO SEE MAYOR

The next time the Boston Landladies' Protective Association holds a meeting to discuss Mayor Hibbard and the Lodging House Commission, and "Shall There Be a Public Parlor?" It probably will not be held in the basement of a schoolhouse with the doors open to the wide, wide world. The landladies met last night in the West Concord street schoolhouse, to discuss the subjects nearest to their hearts. They left the doors open, and politicians drifted in. To-day they say that the politicians are disturbers.

The Lodging House Commission claims to be misunderstood by the landladies. It has no powers. It is an investigating body, and its duty is to investigate the lodging house conditions in Boston, to make a report on the subject to the Mayor. The public hearing idea, however, has roused the landladies. They are afraid that the "Perhaps a better way to solve the problem," at which, perhaps, they would aid, is a suggestion to "ask the landladies to lodge the men on one side of a street, and the women on the other."

Everybody laughed at that, and the meeting was in rare good humor when Mrs. McGowan spoke.

Mrs. Ayer admitted that she is not a landlady. She told the landladies that they were not to be afraid of the commission. They wouldn't stand for it. They should Mrs. Ayer down.

Mr. W. Gavin spoke up for Eugene V. Ives, Socialist candidate for President, and the landladies wouldn't stand for it.

Former Alderman "Bill" Berwin blamed it all on the Mayor. He said that the Mayor had hired a man named Hill, whom he once lived in South End and argued that he ought to be Former Representative John Quinn, Jr., also talked.

At times somebody managed to read a letter from the Mayor, in which Mr. Hibbard said that he wasn't ready to immediately grant the request of the L. P. A. for a hearing on the "Commission" idea. Then a committee was appointed to visit the Mayor at Provincetown and tell him just how matters stand.

"Which, when you come to think about it," said one landlady, "is quite a task."

The $1,000 Key of the AMERICAN "Hidden-Not Lost" contest is hidden in one of the sections shown in this photograph. Should the Key not be found today, another picture, WITH ANOTHER COLUMN OF THE SPACE CUT OUT, will be printed to-morrow. That process of elimination will be kept up from day to day, if necessary, until it results in the printing of a picture of the EXACT SPOT where the Key is secreted.

WOMEN LEAD IN THE HUNT

The money hunt in the Fenway is getting very warm. The elimination of parts of the photograph of the section where the key to the $1,000 is hidden is so narrowing the area of search that the gold cannot much longer elude the keen follower of the trail.

Several hundred people searched yesterday, and took up the quest at daylight again today. The early morning hours are the favorite ones for prosecuting the search. Many of those who ate after the money spend a few hours in this way before they go to work.

Those who visited the scene today found an army going over and over the ground. Among them were a number of women. They were armed with all sorts of implements for the purpose of unearthing. Among these were shovels, spades, shovels, iron prongs, bent wires and other paraphernalia that might help them extricate the key from almost any old place. It

"What do you make out of those two words that give a clue to the whereabouts of the key?" one man asked another today.

"I haven't figured that out yet, but I'm going to stick to the picture clue. The area is getting smaller and pretty soon the exact spot where the key is will be published."

"Yes. I know that is so," returned the Whereat the other speaker allowed that in that case the hunt would be all off.

A man called at the AMERICAN office to-day and asked to have some of the buildings in the picture shown of the Fenway identified. He was told politely that he should get any information of that char-

WALES HAS BUSY WEEK AT QUEBEC

QUEBEC, July 25.—The Prince of Wales is having the liveliest time of his life, attending the festivities in celebration of Quebec's tricentenary.

The Prince is hearing his part in these functions with all the dignity and good sense of his royal position, and he is transformed from admiral to field marshal and then to plain and well-groomed Englishman, as the occasion demands. He is listening to the enthusiastic cheers of the crowd whenever he appears.

He began the morning with a review of the troops, sailors and marines on the parade ground, and then, after a luncheon, he attended the ceremony of affixing as the title deeds of this historic city the parchment turned over as a permanent memorial, before the city fathers, the members of the Legislature, and the members of the Government, and finally mingling with the gay throngs at the state ball at the Parliament building.

The review of the military and naval forces, was the spectacular feature of the day. The troops, in the most magnificent parade ever witnessed on the plains, far exceeded the armies of Wolfe and Montcalm. The ships of the fleet, in the harbor, numbered in the hundreds, and the aggregate to-day numbered 25,000, while the spectators, taking the As-

SEEK LEAK IN VERMONT; MAY TAKE HIM TO-DAY

That George Lusk, the negro who is wanted here for alleged connection with the murder of Mrs. Emma Payrow at Hotel Lafayette, and "Red" Geary, who is supposed to have been his companion in the flight from the city, succeeded in getting out of the State on the authority that Mrs. Payrow's body has been hauled closer in her apartments, is the belief of the police. They declare that Lusk may be caught in Vermont. A careful watch is being kept in places where he formerly resided, and it is expected that he will be caught on one of the many freight trains in that State and immediately taken to Albany. The police believe that he is beating his way toward the West. The police of Albany, Syracuse, Buffalo and other cities have been notified to be on the lookout. Captain Dugan, who is in charge of the detection of the Payrow tragedy, declared to-day:

"It is only a question of time before we arrest these men, and there may be an arrest of some of the other persons connected with them, let me tell you that we have evidence to

ASK RIGHT TO EXTEND "L" PLATFORMS

Having found the "L" platforms at North Station, Dover Street and Bowdoin Wharf altogether too short for the traffic the Northern Elevated Railway Company appeared before the Railroad Commissioners today to ask for permission to "change and extend" them.

"We want to add eight-car trains," counsel for the "L" explained.

Apparently for car storage purposes the Elevated also seeks permission to build a spur elevated track on Commercial street between Prince Street and Jackson Avenue at the North Station end of the project, an additional platform, north of the present structure, to accommodate tunnel trains.

boards of incoming vessels, believed to include the first trans-Atlantic liner, steaming slowly into port to-day after being held up all night at Boston Light by a heavy fog which overhung Boston harbor and extended well along the main coast to the Delaware canal and out into Chesapeake Bay. The liner, in the position of the first to arrive, was the Imperial line, one of the first to arrive this morning, reported a heavy fog all the way from New York last night, but nevertheless the boat made good time. Captain George McKinnon of the steamship Imperial said that the fog was so bad that the boat at Boston Light only got the green light with difficulty.

Several other lines believed to have been further delayed by the fog included the Norwegian vessel, Hjorgren, from Bergen, the Imperial liner, Imperial (land; the Houston liner Houston, from Bremen, Ayres, and the Hamburg America liner, Imperial, from Bremen, and the Leyland liner Lancasterian from Manchester.
